WPR ELECTION COVERAGE POLICY
Wisconsin Public Radio (WPR) provides in-depth balanced election coverage on all of its platforms (News and Classical Service, the Ideas Network and Digital at wpr.org). As a statewide network, WPR covers federal and statewide races as an essential component of its public service and educational mission. In addition, state legislative races and issues and other races of significant regional or local importance may also be covered based on their significance to a statewide or regional audience.

GENERAL ELECTION COVERAGE
WPR will apply the same editorial judgment and journalistic standards in election coverage as it does with all other news and public affairs coverage. WPR’s news and public affairs staff (including reporters, producers, hosts, web editors and editorial managers) will provide the best balanced and unbiased coverage possible of the issues and the candidates for a particular race.

CANDIDATE APPEARANCES ON REGULAR PROGRAMS
Based on its good faith journalistic judgment, WPR will determine how to address general election issues and races on Ideas Network programs that regularly feature news and public affairs coverage (The Morning Show, Central Time, Route 51, The West Side, Hear Me Out and Newsmakers). Exercising such journalistic judgment, it will invite selected candidates to appear on such programs. These appearances will take place after the candidacy filing deadline for each office. Not all candidates for particular races will necessarily be invited to appear, and if a candidate declines the invitation to appear, his or her opponent(s) may still be invited to appear. In addition, regional coverage on location stations in Eau Claire, La Crosse, Green Bay, Superior, Wausau and Milwaukee may include races or issues of significant regional importance on their regional news and public affairs programs (The West Side, Route 51, Hear Me Out, Newsmakers). This coverage may vary from one region to the next.

CANDIDATE INCLUSION CRITERIA FOR SPECIAL ELECTION COVERAGE
During election cycles, WPR may produce special election coverage in the form of debates, town hall meetings, election forums, or other formats that are outside of the regular news or talk programs (“Special Election Coverage”). In such cases, WPR will invite candidates for a particular race to participate based on the pre-determined objective criteria set forth below. In certain cases, WPR will partner with another journalistic organization to produce Special Election Coverage and will adopt a separate specific set of candidate inclusion criteria for that particular event, which will be published online. In such cases, the event specific criteria will take precedence over the general criteria outlined here.

Unless other criteria have been established for a particular Special Election Coverage event, the following criteria shall apply and candidates who meet all of the criteria outlined below for the particular race will be invited to participate in the Special Election Coverage:

2) The candidate is running an active campaign, demonstrated by:

This requirement is waived in races where there is no independent polling;

   b. The candidate maintains a campaign staff (paid or volunteer) operating in an office other than a candidate’s home; and
