From the Director

The pioneering Wisconsin scientists whose experiments made Wisconsin Public Radio possible knew that details mattered. They weren’t preparing notes for an interview on the global financial crisis. They weren’t looking for balance and insight from callers representing the state’s diversity. They weren’t interested in offering beautiful music and companionship to those weary with the work of modern life. They were simply exploring a new technology and that exploration took place in the minutiae of endless experiments in the laboratory.

Life is complicated. That’s not a revelation, but when you’re in the business of news, information, education and entertainment it’s worth repeating. WPR believes that details matter. Whether it’s fact checking a story at the legislature or spending the time to have an extra pair of ears check the sound before a live music broadcast, the people of Wisconsin deserve the best from us. We spend the time to make sure we have the whole story. We ask our listeners to help us explore big ideas from many different perspectives. We seek inspiration in music that is both challenging and compelling.

A commitment to details is the thread that ties us back to those pioneers who developed a technology that has changed lives around the globe. Being engaged in the world helps us understand it just a little better. We hope the tapestry of your day includes the threads of detail that make life rich and colorful - you’ll find them here on WPR.

Education

WPR is my single source for information about what is happening in my local community and in the world. I rely on the honesty, neutrality and integrity of the reporting over the years.

- Mary from Madison

The Lee Ester Fellowship annually funds career development for a budding reporter. During this nine-month fellowship, supported by an endowment honoring the memory of renowned Wisconsin journalist Lee Ester, the Fellow works as a full member of the WPR news team, recording stories and features and deepening their knowledge journalism’s best practices.

Soon you’ll hear our 2011 Fellow, Teresa Shipley, during newscasts. The fellowship makes a profound difference in the life of each young professional: last year’s Fellow, Kirk Carapezza, secured an excellent job at Vermont Public Radio. We have no doubt his experience at WPR counted in his favor.
Inspiration

Thank you for being there and for providing such high quality information and inspiration on a daily basis. You enrich our lives in countless ways, 365 days a year.

- Jean from Luxemburg

The Eduardo Neale-Silva fund provides support for WPR to hold a statewide competition for college-age performers striving for excellence in classical music. The WPR Neale-Silva Young Artists Competition Winners’ Concert is the culmination of months of work by these talented young people, and we broadcast it live for all to hear. Like the fellowship mentioned above, it’s all made possible because of a leadership gift to WPR.
Innovation

Morning Edition, All things Considered, wonderful music and as close to truth in our news as we can get in the USA today. Public radio wakes me in the morning, tells me what is happening in the world, then gives me music so I can still have hope for the future of a species capable of so much grace.

- Steve from Eau Claire

A new website for our program To The Best of Our Knowledge (TTBOOK) will launch later this year. TTBOOK is a Peabody-Award-winning program that WPR produces and distributes to stations throughout the country. Thanks to a small group of generous donors, we are developing a robust new program web site which will 1) make the incredible 20-year TTBOOK archive of interviews available on-demand, 2) allow the program’s staff to post stories online immediately. Future upgrades will also let Web visitors “create their own show” by assembling interviews of interest for use on their mobile devices.
Connection

I love both the Ideas Network and News and Classical Music programming WPR provides. Wisconsin is a better place because of what you do. You are one of the threads that ties people together and makes the “sense of community” across Wisconsin so strong. Thank you!
- Gina from Ashland

A new station for Central Wisconsin is now being enjoyed by thousands of listeners. Leadership gifts from The Mead Witter Family Foundation and Pat and Bill Wilde helped inspire additional donations that funded the completion of our new Central Wisconsin Ideas Network station WHAA-FM. Extending WPR to all of the state is a longstanding goal of ours, and we’re inching closer to reaching that goal.
