One of the joys of my job is meeting you, our listeners and supporters. Your passion for our work and mission is palpable and, indeed, the reason we continue to grow and prosper. I love to hear how the work of our dedicated staff has impacted your life and world view. I continually find inspiration when I reflect on the work we have accomplished together. WPR has a great story to tell, but it’s a story we couldn’t tell without you.

Our story is one of commitment, where research-driven journalism thrives. It’s a story of civil discourse, where guests and callers with diverse perspectives are invited to engage one another with curiosity and respect on The Ideas Network. And, it’s a story of inspiration, where world renowned musicians are heard side-by-side with Wisconsin’s best performers.

2019 was a great year for all that we do — journalism, essential conversations, inspiring music and engaging entertainment. New reporters in Green Bay and Wausau, in-depth coverage of Wisconsin’s complex relationship with alcohol, our investigative podcast about high speed rail, community conversations in Superior, local events and young musicians — they are all part of our story that we are proud to share with you.

I look forward to continuing our work together, and I’d love to hear your story in person at one of our upcoming events or via email at mike.crane@wpr.org. Until then, keep listening and thanks for your support.

Regards,

Mike Crane, Director

2019 At A Glance

For more than 100 years, Wisconsin Public Radio has enriched life in the state with free and independent content that informs and inspires individuals and communities.

426,000 listeners on air, 33,000 online
Our two main networks, NPR News & Music and The Ideas Network, are available on air and online. We also offer an All Classical channel online and via HD radio.

We serve the state with local staff and studios in Madison, Milwaukee, Green Bay, Wausau, Superior, Eau Claire and La Crosse. We also maintain a business office in Appleton.

WPR.org served more than 11 million pageviews on topics including news, current affairs, science, pop culture and much more.

Our single largest source of support is from individual listeners like you — thank you!
WPR’s news team reports on urgent issues every day, while also taking a deeper look at the economic, political and cultural fabric of Wisconsin. In 2019, WPR explored Wisconsin’s complicated relationship with alcohol in the special series “High Tolerance.” In more than 20 stories featured in our newscasts, talk shows and on wpr.org, the project examined the many ways alcohol impacts our lives. Stories ranged from profiles of women in the industry to the challenges of finding alcoholism treatment in rural areas.

Our commitment to outstanding journalism extended to digital-first projects as well. Our seven-episode podcast “Derailed” dug into the real story of how high-speed rail almost came to Wisconsin. Rigorously reported by Capitol Bureau Chief Shawn Johnson and Special Projects Reporter Bridgit Bowden, the podcast reexamined a story from the recent past and shed light on today’s partisan political landscape.

We added expertise to our team by hiring a new rural communities reporter and a sports reporter in 2019. WPR also continued to train the next generation of journalists through our three news fellowships. Fellows received hands-on experience in public radio news production and ethics.

Our extensive network of studios and reporters is on the ground and building connections on air, online, and in communities statewide. Last year we invited students at Monona Grove Liberal Arts Charter School to create pieces for “Wisconsin Life.” The students told the stories that they most wanted to tell — about themselves, their families, music and history. Working with producer Maureen McCollum, students learned interviewing skills and audio production. The final stories were broadcast statewide in “Classroom Frequency: Student Voices From Wisconsin.”

This year our WHYconsin series took off, producing more than 20 stories based on listener-submitted questions about Wisconsin, its people and its culture. From the state’s complicated county road naming scheme to Hodags to ways to safely traverse frozen lakes and rivers, all questions were welcome.

Every day, The Ideas Network invites Wisconsinites to share their perspectives on the issues that matter to them. This year we broadcast from Superior on the one-year anniversary of the Husky Energy refinery fire, as well as from Mineral Point Elementary School to explore Wisconsin history.

Classical music forms the core of WPR’s music offerings, with more than 100 hours broadcast each week. Throughout 2019, we aired world-renowned artists side by side with some of Wisconsin’s best musicians. Our commitment to celebrating young talent included the statewide broadcast of selections from the annual Wisconsin School Music Association Honors Concerts and the Madison Symphony Orchestra’s “Final Forte” Bolz Young Artist Competition. WPR also offered a mix of Wisconsin-hosted jazz, world, folk, blues and Native American music each week on statewide and regional networks.

WPR listeners are engaged and curious. In 2019, we invited thousands to try something new with live events in communities across the state. We celebrated 40 years of “Simply Folk” with Grammy Award nominees Dom Flemons and Mary Gauthier, and Madison favorite Cris Plata. Milwaukee listeners signed up for The Explorers Club to learn pickling and food preservation skills. The “WPR Politics Podcast” team recorded live episodes in Washburn, Waukesha and Chippewa Falls. And we invited listeners out to parks, breweries, and concert venues for listener appreciation events across the state.
